DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Our fall horror radio show has become one of my favorite directing experiences. In each of our previous shows, I have attempted to guide writers in different directions, as we have explored various horror subgenres – the grisly irony of Poe, the classic atmosphere of Dracula, the terrifying chaos of The Ancient Mariner – and now, with The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, the psychological thriller, complete with hallucinations, mystery, and the influence of horror director David Cronenberg (Scanners, Videodrome, The Fly, Naked Lunch). I have continually been impressed by the group of writers that has followed me from horror film to horror film in search of genre conventions, character types, and style. While I stitched this show together as an editor, they have written it completely. It is to them, and the actors playing the roles they have created, that this show truly belongs.
